1.0 Introduction

The concept of the American Dream is related to American success, how people who belong to poor families have a dream to reach the peak of success with their hard work in a new land. The term American Dream was coined by James Truslow Adams in 1931 and he explains it in his book The Epic of America.

The American Dream is that dream of a land in which life should be better and richer and fuller for everyone with the opportunity for each according to ability or achievement. (it's not) a dream of motor cars and high wages merely, but a dream of social order in which each man and woman shall be able to attain to the fullest stature of which they are innately capable, and be recognized by others for what they are, regardless of the fortuitous circumstances of birth or position. (Adams 21).

He says that the American dream is not only related to luxurious things and life, it is about capability, people will get what they deserve. Birth or prior position does not matter in which society they are born or belong to which caste or race etc. The Great Gatsby is the finest example of the American dream in which the protagonist belongs to a poor family but he gets a deserved place in society. In America, it is quite often that people get the American dream with a struggle but Gatsby gets it very quickly. He wants to win Daisy's love for this he becomes the richer man of his time but his dream is not true. Gatsby is a symbol of the false American Dream which is visible throughout the novel. Nick has a different opinion about Gatsby who is the wealthiest person. He says, "Only Gatsby is the man who gives, his name to this book, was exempt from my reaction- Gatsby, who represented everything... if personality is an unbroken series of successful gestures, then there was something gorgeous about him, some heightened sensitivity to the promises of life (Fitzgerald 12).

As it is quite visible, he has no friends whether he throws parties and lot of people enjoyed but he has no desire to make friends. His dream to win the love of Daisy is remained unfulfilled. He tried many times but was not able to achieve this goal. He lived in a materialistic society, despite all the wealth he felt isolated every time. At the time of his death, there is no one for his cremation and this scene is described by a Dutch sailor who says:

"Most of the big shore places were closed now and there were hardly any lights except the shadowy, moving glow of a ferryboat across the sound a fresh, green breast of the new world. Its vanished trees, the trees that had made way for Gatsby's house, had once pandered in whispers to the last and greatest of all human dreams; for a transitory enchanted moment" (Fitzgerald 200).

Nick is a narrator of the novel who plays a significant role in the success of this novel. He belongs to a rich family as compared to other characters and enjoys his life. Fitzgerald creates his character as a guide and pathfinder which is perfectly related to this new world. Moreover, he belongs to the American Dream which is described by his father at the beginning of the novel. His father advised him "whenever you feel like criticizing anyone" he told me, "Just remember that all the people in this world haven't had the advantages that you've had" (Fitzgerald 11). Apart from Nick, Jordan Baker lover of Nick clarifies many things regarding Gatsby, who knows Gatsby and Daisy. She knows about their past and gives an idea about Gatsby's parties, his lavishing lifestyle. She had a wish to become like Buchannan's family who has a great life.
